Section R1 (13 marks)

Read the following passage and answer all the questions.

Holiday Reading

Most book lovers in New York are familiar with the city’s public library on Fifth Avenue. With over 50 million books, it is the fourth largest in the world. However, in the New York Library Hotel, visitors don’t have to speak softly. With more than 6,000 books, the Library Hotel is the ultimate lodging for book lovers. Located at the corner of Madison and 41st Street, a few steps from the public library, every one of the hotel’s 60 rooms contains up to 150 carefully selected titles.

The boutique hotel is designed around the Dewey Decimal System, which was published by Melvil Dewey in 1876. It is the standard library classification system, which puts books into the following ten categories: social sciences, literature, languages, history, maths and science, general knowledge, technology, philosophy, the arts and religion. Each floor of the hotel is dedicated to one of the categories in the system. ‘Maths and science’ is the category for the fifth floor. Every room on that floor is decorated according to a topic within that category, for example dinosaurs or astronomy. Guests on the seventh floor can stay in rooms devoted to social sciences. The tenth floor is dedicated to philosophy, with rooms relating to psychology, ethics and, the most popular room of all, love.

Guests can also find reading material in the restaurant and in a silent reading room. If you don’t feel like reading you can drink in the rooftop bar, which serves literary-themed cocktails. A hotel spokesperson said: ‘We advocate traditional books over electronic devices. Our guests are trustworthy and, so far, nobody has taken a book home. Reading habits may have changed, but most guests here still like holding a real book in their hands and classic titles are proving more popular than modern fiction.’

There have been some problems in the hotel’s development. In 2003, a trademark complaint was made in court against the Library Hotel by the owners of the Dewey Decimal Classification System. Later, the hotel received permission to use the Dewey Decimal Classification trademarks in their hotel promotion, after making a financial donation to a charity that promotes children’s reading.

For questions 1-3, please answer in complete sentences. (2 marks each)

1. Where in New York is the Library Hotel?

2. How is each floor of the hotel different?

Section R2 (7 marks)

Read the five short news stories below. Choose from the articles (A to E) and complete the answer grid. The articles may be chosen more than once. One has been done for you as an example.

A. Residents of Little Rock, Arizona, experienced a tornado on Sunday night. The tornado was half a kilometre wide and swept through 90 kilometres of the area, devastating the same communities that were destroyed exactly three years ago. Blowing in at speeds of up to 200 mph, it caused extensive damage. In addition to razing several homes and businesses, it also flattened a brand new school that was due to open in the autumn.

B. More than 100 people have been evacuated from a small Japanese island this morning after the volcano on Mount Shindake erupted without warning. The eruption sent clouds of ash and rock over five miles into the sky. Local officials say there haven't been any casualties but some flights have been diverted. Japan's meteorological agency has raised the alert level to '5', the highest on the scale.

C. Last week, Hong Kong residents were amazed to see stunning blue patches of water along their coastlines. Experts were not as happy. The blue patches were algae, a type of weed. It is not toxic to humans, but lethal for marine life. Noctiluca scintillans is caused by agricultural chemicals released into the ocean. At the moment, the algae is no longer there. Experts spent several days removing it and local farmers have been fined to try and prevent a repeat occurrence.

D. Rising sea levels are a worry for many coastal areas around the world. Indonesia's capital, Jakarta, is particularly vulnerable. Located in the northwest coast of the Java Sea, this populous city lies on the low flat basin that is Jakarta Bay. Forty percent of the city lies below sea level and is sinking by fifteen centimetres annually. If this continues, much of northern Jakarta will be underwater by 2030.

E. Texas, the second most populous U.S. state, and India's capital, Delhi, may lie in two different continents and over 8,300 miles apart but over the past few weeks both have made headlines for their extreme weather. The only difference is that while Texas is being inundated with torrential rains, Delhi has been experiencing a heat wave so severe that hospitals are overflowing with casualties.
